was adopted, it should apply to the present bill, and to the bill to be introduced on the ground. It was just as reasonable to apply the principle to the present Parliament as to future Parliaments. Mr. MACINTOSH thought, rather than have this Government legislation, it would be better to have an amendment inserted into the bill, maintaining the principle of this bill in respect to future electoral bills. Mr. FORSTER did not think it was fair for the House to make a bill which was to ask the Government provided to deal in regard to the dissolution of future Parliaments. It would be time enough for the House to act on the bill now before it, and to leave the Government in position to apply the principle of limiting the duration of future Parliaments to three years, if he would vote for it. Mr. MACINTOSH proposed that the House should vote on the amendment, it would be competent for the member for Hawkesbury to propose a new clause. The question, "That the words proposed to be omitted from the second question be then put, and agreed to," he clause was then agreed to. Mr. FIDDLINGTON proposed the following, to stand as a question of order: "That the bill be amended so that the duration for a longer period than three years from the date of the return of the writs of the last general election." Mr. GARETT said he would second the motion. Mr. GARETT submitted to the committee that the committee had been instructed to consider a "Bill to limit the duration of future Parliaments to three years," it was not competent for the committee to consider a bill which would be entirely foreign to the bill submitted to its consideration. Mr. FIDDLINGTON ruled that it was competent for the committee to add the proposed new clause. Mr. OAKES hoped that the hon. gentleman in charge of the bill would consider the amendment of the hon. member for Hawkesbury. Mr. GARETT moved the omission of the word "three" in the proposed new clause, with the view of inserting the word "five." Mr. WEBB pointed out that if the amendment were carried, the present House would be dissolved in February. The hon. member for Hawkesbury said that he was not nearly convinced, and that would be very inconvenient. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Camden was then agreed to. Mr. FERRY moved the amendment of the title of the bill, to make it conform with its altered character. Mr. GARETT rose to order. He considered it beyond the power of the committee to insert this clause, as it was entirely foreign to the scope of the bill. The committee had decided that the committee could not amend the bill. He said a point of order to be submitted to the Speaker, enquiring if the committee had the right to amend the bill in accordance with the alteration. Mr. FIDDLINGTON said it was unnecessary to take this course, as Committees of the Whole had frequently made amendments of bills, and had altered the title bill afterwards in accordance with the alteration. The motion was put and carried, the House resumed, and Mr. DRIVER reported the point of order, as submitted to the Speaker, and asked if the House would agree to the motion. Mr. DRIVER quoted the passage of May, on which he relied in giving his decision in favour of the amendment. Mr. GARETT, in support of the point of order, said that the bill was to regulate the duration of all future Parliaments, and that the committee had no right to amend the present Parliament could but be regarded as beyond the scope of the bill as referred to the committee. As well as that, they have introduced a clause terminating the duration of the bill, and that might have taken place had they now then the danger of admitting amendments of this kind. The rules of Parliament were to be construed in a manner which would be to the benefit of the people, and that the committee would be to the benefit of the people, and that the committee would be to the benefit of the people. Mr. FIDDLINGTON said that there was no question at all as to the amendment in the bill, since that amendment had been carried by the House, and that the committee was as to the power of the committee to alter the title alone. It was only on the question of the power of the committee to amend the bill. Mr. SPEAKER said that he considered it to be quite within the scope of the power of the committee to make the amendment, and that he would not object to the amendment of the title were not to be departed from, and the proposed amendment could be made in the three years, and this would be entirely in accordance with the intention of the bill. The House went into committee. The words "all future" were omitted from the bill. The House resumed, and the bill was reported with amendments, and it was also reported that the title had been amended. The report was adopted. The House adjourned nine minutes before 11 o'clock on Tuesday night. PARLIAMENT. T. T. Robertson, for. Neale against, and Burns for, with Mr. Abbott against, the second round, finished three rounds, and had altered the title bill afterwards in accordance with the alteration. NEW NOTICES. THE NINE-O' CLOW.—The members of this club and a few country friends left town on Saturday morning for cleaner Polaris for one of their usual fishing parties. The weather was just what was needed for an enjoyable, the sea tolerably smooth, and by 11 o'clock the anchor was dropped of Barrenjuey. The prize previously arranged for the first, second, and third fish caught some excitement, and hardly had the lines touched bottom when a cheer from all announced that a fish was aboard. The professional fisherman engaged for the trip proved the fish was a large one, and the fisherman's hands were given to him as a member of the Press fish club. The fish was on deck, and shortly afterwards two came in from the boat. The fisherman was not a little surprised to find a brick for about a half-second. The sport was tolerably good, and the fisherman was not a little surprised to find the fish stopped biting, the North Head ground was tried with such success that had it not been for the capture of a

The way the fish tumbled about was something to look at. The fish were in the water, and when about thirty down the fish, including the mackerel, herring, cod, salmon, and the sea bream, were captured. The fish were then taken to the shore and the fish were sold. The fish were then taken to the shore and the fish were sold. The fish were then taken to the shore and the fish were sold.

she was going to a house of Pitt-street North, where she had heard some one had some baby-linen to make up, and she had been told that it was a very good place to get a sweater rate. Mr. Moon gave a certificate, stating that he professionally attended the deceased for months past for various ailments, and that the death had resulted from the bursting of a blood vessel. The Coroner, therefore, dispensed with an inquest.

INQUEST AT THE GLIERE.—On Saturday forenoon, the City Coroner held, at the Glier, an inquest respecting the cause of death of Mrs. Nelson, residing at No. 11, Christie-street, West. The Coroner was assisted by the engineer, who had been up the country, but had come down to Sydney on hearing of his wife's illness, was first called in to attend to her, and then to the Glier, where she had been a woman of intemperate habits. It was said about three weeks before—previous to his going to

NEW SOUTH WALES OPERATIVE BAKERS' ASSOCIATION. The annual picnic in connection with this association took place on Saturday, 12th, the day after the storm. A steamer, the "Chowder Boy," and thither a steamer plying from the Circular Quay conveyed about three hundred persons to the shore. The day was a fine one, and the excursion could be desired, a cool easterly breeze blowing on the pleasure grounds. The excursionists kept up various sports with spirit. The services of a band of music enabled them to enjoy the day to the full. The day was a success. Some strolled away to see the fortifications at George's Head. There was an abundance of refreshment of all kinds for the convenience of visitors. After a pleasant day, the excursionists returned to the city about sundown.

A NEW VERSION OF THE OPERA OF "MARI-TANA."—Our musical readers will doubtless be a little

That journal says—"On Saturday evening, the last of the season, the opera of La Traviata was performed, but not so crowded as on previous occasions during the week. The soprano was Marianne. Miss Alice May was the prima donna, and Mr. Badenford, who divides the honors with her, was in particularly good voice. For his pleasing rendering of 'The heart bowed down with weight of care,' he obtained an encore; and in the third act he introduced a new song, which was also well received. The performance was loudly cheered at the conclusion of her song, 'Some that are brightest,' and in reply to calls for an encore sang 'The Nightingale.' The audience was very numerous, and she sang with exquisite feeling 'The Last Rose of Summer.'" one day and a night. Mrs. Bohl did tell us that we did not drive early enough, and on Sunday week Mr. Bohl told us we did not get up early enough. Mrs. Bohl told us that she was in London. Mrs. Bohl where the place was, she said it was the London Tavern, at Beechworth. He told us some time after we arrived that her daughter had been in London. Mrs. Bohl told us that she had been hearing Mr. Bohl in defence, the police magistrate and the Bench were unanimously of opinion that the plaintiffs had not been properly treated, and certainly, the fact that the plaintiffs had been treated in this way, it was better that the licensing bench should deal with that part of the evidence. The defendant had no business to do this, and he had been induced to engage themselves on false statements. The order therefore would be for the week's wages in each case, £28, total, 24s. That their board be £12, 12s. 6d. and that they be paid for the expenses they came from (coach and railway fare, 25s. 6d.)

AMUSEMENT FOR CHILDREN.—A mother of five restless children writes to a London Journal on the treatment and amusement of children. She advises the following.—1st. As a game. Let the children choose their own amusements, or let them select from those and their aunt suggest others, or correct those as much as possible out of the Scriptures. This may be made very interesting, as an illustration a year or two ago I saw a young girl at a party, who had been given to her by the Children's Society, fully show. 2nd. Puzzles. In the Sunday at Home there is a succession of mental games and pictures which are well adapted for the purpose. 3rd. Questions. I encourage my children to write questions on the Bible regularly for me to answer. If they can come up with one question, I give them a small reward. 4th. Questions. usually paid. It may be, by previous agreement, unto the members, or Scripture songs, or any other trifles. They may be very useful, without any idea of lessness. Let them learn Scripture, hymns, or catechism, as they imagine, voluntarily; or if the catechism is compulsory, let them be rewarded with a small sum of money, or an additional rate of pocket money is regularly paid for verses of hymns, and a higher rate for Scripture. A very great end is thus accomplished, and the children are made to love the Bible. Mr. St. John should consider the character of the children. If they are little girls too young to read much, let them nurse their dolls and teach them the names of the parts of the body, and let them learn to sew. If they are boys, let them walk out and distribute the picture tracts of which they are used to poor children, who will almost always be glad to receive them. Let them be made to feel that they are the children of the Most Holy Bible, &c. Above all, remember that no one can be a really learning, and let them
